Mayachny Cape is the end point of the mountain range at the exit from Avachinskaya Bay. From the crocks of the cape, views of the waters of the Pacific Ocean, Avachinskaya Bay, and the Vilyuchinsky and Mutnovsky volcanoes open up. In winter, a trip to Mayachny Cape is an opportunity to meet the sunrise over the Pacific Ocean, ride in a sled behind a snowmobile on the frozen Prilivnoye Lake, along the surrounding hills.

During this excursion, you will see the legendary Petropavlovsky lighthouse: The most interesting object of the southeastern coast of Kamchatka is the first class Petropavlovsky lighthouse, which has experienced a lot in its history and continues to work, helping sailors. And although it is often called the patriarch among its Far Eastern brothers, the Hydrographic Department did not consider this object to be its own for a long time. Only on July 13, 1833, a notice to mariners appeared, which reported the location of the Kamchatka lighthouses and the nature of their operation. After this, the lighthouse on Dalniy Cape began to be put on maps.
